SUMMARY OF CONTENTS

Editorial : Copenhagen: Equality Athens: Inequality

by A. Y.-M.

The writer of the article is wondering why the Greek government spent money to send a multi-membered delegation to the Copenhagen Conference since the Minister of Justice declared to a Women's Organisations Committee that visited him lately that he is not going «to dissolve the family» by accepting certain amendments to the Greek Family Law - amendments which would bring about sex equality.

There is every reason to worry about the fate of the new draft of law which will be submitted to the Parliament in October and which is supposed to amend our old-fashioned Family Law.

Research: School Education and stereotypes discriminating sexes

by Dimitra Makrynioti Sociologist, M. A. University of Essex introduction by Joanna Lambiri-Dimaki
Assistant Professor of Sociology
Athens University

The influence of education in preparing the future roles of both sexes in life is very important. Ms Makrynioti made a serious study of Greek school books and analysed the stereotypes that are promoted through the procedure of learning.

The writer concluded that school books show a non realistic picture of the position of the two sexes in the Greek family.

Equality or Inequality of sexes dissolve family ?

article by Ms A. Yotopoulos-Marangopoulos
President of L.W. R.

The refusal of the Greek delegates to sign in Copenhagen the International Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women makes the writer believe that the Greek government is not intending to amend in a satisfactory way the old-fashioned Family Law which holds women down.

Ms Marangopoulos analyses why a family living according to the old patriarchal stereotypes has less chances to survive in today's society than a family based on equality and mutual respect.

League activities

Due to the fact that our League organised many important round table discussions and lectures during the last months, we dedicated a large part of this journal to brief accounts of these activities.
